The MEDICAL OFFICER OF HEALTH said that as far as the disinfection of the whole house was concorned, he had written to the Colonial Secretary and also to His Excellency that in 1808, when they had a number of cases of plague, he pointed out in his annual report that there were 25 houses in which repeat cases ocourred after the lapse of a greater interval than 10 days, and speaking roughly six of these 25 houses were houses in which the repeat cases courred on another floor. Howas convinced there were one or two other cases of which he had lost the certificates. There was a very strong presumption that if a house became infeeted with plague the plague lifection might spread from an upper floor to slower floor and rice versa, and in consequence in 1696 he gave instructions that whenever a case occurred the vhole house was to be disinfected. He knew the Chinese were very anxious that the regulation should be done away with. Personally he did not feel justified in doing away with it, and as he pointed out to the Colonial Secretary the responsibility rested largely apon him, because the Bye-law gid the work was to be done to the satisfaction of the Medical Micer of Health. The Passident thought Dr. Clark spoke good sound sense. People might be allowed to cleanse their own houses provided it was done to the satisfaction of the inspedor of nuisances or the Medical Officer. They would observe that the deputation said that "the reason for dead bodies of plague patients being put into the streets was their fear and dislike of having their premises invaded by the house-elemsing gang, the forcible removals of their furniture which appeared in our yesterday a trans from every room in the house, the consequent breakage of some of their poor farmiture, and Ho remarked that he should like to take to reated by western medical methods.

Hugh Wyane, Free Quaker, Sometime Brevel

Lieutenant-Colonel on the Staff of His Excellency General Wathington. By S. WEIB MITORELL, M.D., L.L.D., Edinburgh and Harvard. London: T. Fisher Unwin. 1897 An introductory note explains the second title of the book. For several years before the war which separated the American colonies from England many persons in the Society of Friends were of epinion that passive resistance to oppression was a duty; others held that setive resistance, even to bloodshed, was justifiable. These beliefs, which were looked upon as contrary to the views of the Society, led to dissensions, stormy debates; and at last to the expulsion of many able and consciontions men. Some of them won distinction in the rebel army, others in the civil service of the state. At the close of the war those discovned Friends who were known as Free Quakers, formed a distinct sect and set forth a statement of doctrine. After some years the Free Quakers ceased to exist, most of them and their descendants having found their way into the American branch of the Church of England. The father of Hugh Wynne was a strong-willed, hot temporod adherent of the old schools of Quakers; the son, who inherited his father's character but not his opinions, became a Free Quaker and took a prominent part in the war of the revolution. The tale is of absorbing interest. both historically and as a tale of love and adventure. The celebrated Arnold and André incident is ingeniously worked in, the hero being represented as a close personal friend of the unfortunate André. The following As his account of the closing scene in that tragedy :-"Of the horrible scene at noon on the 2nd-

At the Magistracy yesterday, before Commander Hastings Au Cheung (17), of Tung Stide Hun, hawker, and Lo Tak Sui (19), of Tung Hun, bawker, were charged with assaulting a youth named Ng Ting, with intent to rob him, being further charged with stealing from Ng Ting a bundle containing silk and cotton clothing, of the value of $35.

Complainant said he was 15 years of age and was an apprentice at Lo Tung Hee's tailor's shop at 4. Pokfulam Street. On the 14th instant, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, he was going round to the seamstresses to collect the clothes which had been given them to sew. When he had got to the foot of a staircase to a seamstress's room in Queen's Road West the first defendant came up to him and threw some pepper into his face, blinding him. At the same time the bundle was snatched from him. He cried out, and followed first defendant into the street, but lost sight of him. He next saw first defendant at the Police Station. Hongkong, 21st April 1898. PUBLIC RICKSHAS.

Sir,-May I through the medium of your valuable columns suggest a slight alteration in the public street ricksha? No doubt every one who has been in one on a rainy day has noticed that although protected with oil cloths in front and on both sides, the rain makes its way to the face and shoulders, thereby causing much discomfort. Could not the ricksha owners be made to add an extra section to the hood? This, I think, would give the public a more comfortable vehicle. Yours faithfully RICKSHA.
